Willow Valley Judging Day Successful Event

Nearly 300 sportsmen and their wives from across southern Alberta gathered in Lundbreck on Saturday afternoon, January 11 for what has become one of the biggest achievement events in the province.

It was the 15th annual awards day of the Willow Valley Trophy Club, an outdoorsmen's organization that leads the way in Alberta in the yearly calibration of trophy, big game animals.

The coveted grand champion Ed and Babe Trophy was captured by the combination of Harry Freeman of Bellevue and Dick Girard of Coleman.

Their entry was a cougar skull that measured up for 15 and 8 1/2 points.

The Ed and Babe Trophy, donated by Mr. and Mrs. Ed Burton of Claresholm, is awarded annually to the entry that shows the biggest percentage gain over standing longtime averages of any big game trophy entered.

The 15 and 8 1/2 points of the cougar skull entered by Freeman and Girard was 114.8 per cent over last year. The entry was 4 1/2 of a point away from the record which is 15 and 12 1/2 points held in a tie between Ed Burton of Claresholm and former W. Waterton Park, 393 3/8 (1962).

The Charter Member Trophy went to Alex Cyr of Lundbreck with a goat that measured 47 2/8 points. This was 110 per cent of the standing longtime average.

OF MANY THINGS

(By Ambrose Hills)

How To Face a Crisis

Someone, in talking about evangelist Billy Graham, doubted that he preached "a philosophy acceptable to our times". I read that criticism and it bothered me. We streamline our automobiles, and change our furniture styles, but must philosophy come in a new model each year?

I don't think so.

I find the philosophy of Emerson true today, and the Sermon on the Mount needs no new curlicues.

It seems to me that if I were deeply troubled, I would not reach out, quickly, for the latest in philosophy. I would go back to the old maxims.

What better way to face a crisis than to remember the old injunction that sufficient to the day is the evil thereof? Every time I bump into some of the hard facts of life, I go back to that old advice and try to live my life one day at a time, looking neither backward nor forward. I get out Sir William Osler and read him again, for that was the philosophy that guided his life.

Mankind has battled for so long—generation after generation—that virtually every crisis we ordinary men must face has been puzzled over and faced a thousand times by others. Some of the most gifted have written down, in detail, the attitude that helped them most. It seems to me that these attitudes are as valid now as they were when Caesar ruled, and when Christ walked among men.

Some planning for the future may be necessary and prudent, but a plan, if too formalized, has limiting effects. To some extent it closes the mind, and closes the door to alternatives that might in a flash make the plan obsolete.

For what it is worth, my advice to those in trouble is to go right back to the old philosophy. Live the day before you, trying to love your fellowman, knowing that we all face personal trials and tragedy. Plan in only the most general way for the days ahead, and grieve only in the most general way for the days behind.

Live today the best way you know how—and that's plan enough for any man.

OF MANY THINGS

(By Ambrose Hills)

The Insult

Long, long ago I had a big, shaggy friend who was disliked by many in our crowd. I was a radio announcer in those days, and he was a disk jockey on another station. One day, at a convention, he came to my room. He told me that in the general meeting he had been insulted by the speaker.

I said, "How could he insult you? You've never had any respect for him, so why are you so het up about what he said?"

My friend—let's call him Carl—said, "I've never spoken a word at a convention before . . . but the minute I opened my mouth he jumped on me—and then he walked out, saying he didn't have to listen to the kind of tripe I was talking."

"If I were you," I told him, "I'd just forget it. How come you're so worked up?"

My friend had often boasted to me that as far as he was concerned, life was just a game, soon over, and nothing mattered. But the main speaker had gotten to him, somehow, and he was in a turmoil.

"I'll get even with the so-and-so," he said.

This morning, more than 30 years later, he came to my office. We talked about the old days. Then, turning quite serious, he asked if I remembered that episode when he had sworn revenge. I did have a vague recollection of it, and told him so.

"You know," he said. "That's bothered all my life. It was silly. And yet, for a long time I held that grudge. It did only one good thing for me, it made me work hard to try to catch up to the man who insulted me. Long after I had forgiven him, the habit of hard work and serious thinking stuck with me. I suppose, in a way, the insult did me a favor."

How right he was!

Our enemies, those who tell us our faults straight, are often our best friends.

They spur us on.

Small Business Courses Helping Canadian Industry

Courses conducted under the federal provincial Small Business Management Training Program are having a beneficial effect on the operations of small businesses.

This was illustrated this week at a conference in Ottawa of the administrators of Small Business Management Training from six provinces and one international trade association. The meeting was called by the federal Department of Labor and included representatives from British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

It was shown that, as a result of federally-supported business courses in local communities, many owners and operators of small businesses are changing their methods of keeping records, handling accounts receivable, keeping inventory, determining prices, interpreting financial statements, buying budgeting, sales promotion and other business operations.

The courses, prepared by the Department of Labor, have been written by authorities in each aspect of small business management including Retailing, Management, Counting and Marketing for Small Manufacturers.

The courses have been organized in some 30 local communities by Boards of Trade, service clubs, business men's associations, and trade associations, and have been attended by 1,000 owners of small businesses. The program is administered provincially by departments of education which arrange for instructors chosen from the ranks of business and professional men.

It was reported at the meeting that the business community is giving the program a great deal of support. The provincial administrators reported that there is a heavy demand for courses throughout their respective provinces. A number of companies are studying the program with a view to adapting it to the needs of their dealers, retail outlets and industrial salesmen.

Speaking at the opening of the meeting, Dr. C. R. Ford, director, Technical and Vocational Training branch, Department of Labor, stressed the necessity for management training stating that the courses specifically designed for Canadian small business can be of great assistance to continuing economic growth in all parts of Canada. He said that management training should lead to a higher rate of business success, better profits, greater stability, and fuller use of resources.

Improved small business performance is a decided asset to the growth of Canada's economy at the rate necessary to provide a satisfactory level of employment and standard of living, he stated.

Dr. Ford said that every survey and analysis of small business, both in North America and Europe, has established that managerial shortcomings out-weigh all other reasons for small business failure and poor performance. He added that the conclusion must be drawn that management training will improve this situation.

department, and dates of availability will be announced by each clinic.

The Sabin vaccine will be given in two doses at six-week intervals and will be available only to persons who have already completed full immunization by Salk vaccine.

The Sabin vaccine builds up and strengthens the immunity already conferred by the Salk vaccine and confers almost certain immunity against the three main strains of polio. Alberta was the first province in Canada to institute the two-dose procedure which ensures the maximum benefits.

During last year's program 507,000 people, or 69 per cent of those eligible, received their first dose of Sabin vaccine and 408,000 received their second dose. Those persons who only received one dose during last year's program will be able to take their second dose in 1964.

For the past eight years, all children have received Salk vaccine along with their regular vaccination as part of the province's regular immunization program for diphtheria. So effective has this program been that the incidence of polio in the province is now lower than that of diphtheria.

Dear Tom and Mildred:

Once again it is time to send my $2.00 for The Journal. This is one payment I really enjoy paying because I sure do look forward to our little home paper. It keeps me up on the daily happenings.

Sorry to read of the passing on of so many dear friends though; makes one sad when the old timers leave us; but we can't keep them forever, can we?

I am very well and enjoy living up here on Vancouver Island. Nanaimo is truly a lovely city. I go into Victoria as often as possible. Always see Lorraine and Vern Brown, and usually see other Colemanites.

Wishing everyone back in Coleman a very happy and prosperous 1964.

Sincerely,
ETHEL KOSTELNIK.

SABBATICAL REPORT

FROM THE DESK OF HARRY BANSMORE

Dedicated to the fond memory of those that are not, and to a dwindling Brotherhood with the dwindling remnant of those that are.

You will remember reading that under the Old Testament economy every 50 years all Jews in servitude were set free. All land was returned to its former owner, and all outstanding bills were cancelled. If you don't know it you should. If that more than one foreign country and some of our close neighbors are practising the above cancellation clause on us EVERY year.

It seems that Moses and the Prophets called this 50 year period the "Sabbatical". As Christians seems to be the fiscal as well as the Sabbatical for hounds and hounds of mighty fine folk all over the globe, it would appear to be proper for some, if not a lot of us, to declare ourselves and our house holds right now me and my dog to be on both sides of the Sabbatical Equator. That is to say, "Live and let live", and that's what all that, the old social gospel had to offer a lost and dying world some 50 or more years ago.

Please pardon my lack of ability to mind things that have been long since dead. But, will some one of you "learned gentleman of the cloth" please refresh me as to whatever happened to that old saviour of mankind, namely "The New Social Gospel". Possibly it vanished to Russia when prohibition went out at home, maybe? So much for this introductory warm-up.

1... "Chapter One or the first leg of so-called Sabbatical Report".

In November, 1962, we left our comfortable home and friends in Hyannis and nearby towns on Cape Cod, "Massachusetts", that neck of the world where the late President John F. Kennedy grew up summers. We travelled in an old 1958 straight-eight Pontiac ambulance altered to an Auto Home or House Car. After a few days' visit in Philadelphia we made a beeline to Birmingham, Alabama.

After being thoroughly convinced that the integration spotlight was not even in its embryonic state and all snipers were at flight, we took off for Southern California via a deep southern route, chiefly to avoid an unwelcome breeze from northern Canada, and we just made it, arriving there one week before Christmas.

And what a long tough ride it was!

From observation and weather bureau statistics it is evident that the coastal section of Southern California can offer the best year-round climate of possibly any other part of North America. Eighty degrees is almost the limit in summer and if ever, very, very light frost in winter.

From wherever you happen to live, on your way to Mexico for "junk", you should spend the best part of a day at Balboa Zoo, San Diego, one of, if not the largest, zoo in the world, and where they cater to man-eating animals.

This is no fable.

After returning from your small game hunt in Mexico, with a donkey strata hat and possibly some donkey manure and dead flies in your pockets, and for absolute sure in your sandwich if you bought it from the street vendors.

What a mess—what a mess! Give me rather the old homestead bachelor of the foothills west of the Rockies who usually had but one knife to pare his toenails, then after a couple of swipes on his overalls, he would proceed, a you host, to slice off some salt bacon for the unexpected company. No, No, your author is not doing what you think—these are facts marked indelibly on my young mind in the year of Our Lord 1902 A.D., right in the middle fork of the Old Man River some miles south of the great Frank Slide of April, 1903. You see what I think of Mexico.

At the moment, temptation has us bewildered. To avoid partially, space and time will not permit even the minutest biographical sketch of some of the great that we have known and have been contacting along the trip. However, at the expense of a possible jaunty flare-up, we may word picture to you just one personality at random?

At Salona Beach, some 20 miles north of San Diego, lives a very humble, retired "well, what have you" who holds a Deep Sea Captain's licence; an AI Battleship Builders inspection certificate as well as a certificate to inspect part, if not all, of the very latest and technical Supersonic Aircraft Destroyers, and because of some eye deficiency was forced to forego further activity as an Air Pilot. In explaining some mystery to us of the technical world, if his terrific and unlimited technical vocabulary does not click or show signs of keeping you humble, he may then get out that huge book on Seismographical Science—that is earthquakes and the cause thereof.

This soon takes on the connotation of a lecture, somewhere here if you don't reach for a pill (dizziness) then you are either destined to be buried nearby the bones of Albert Einstein or else for sure you are eligible for a quiet home (you know).

I know, because I have been through it—That is the lecture, not the home, and might well this personification of humility leave a niche to perpetuate. For should you happen back east, you would find his name along the famous in and about Salem, Massachusetts, and will quickly notice in large bold-face letters, Devereux Beach, Devereux Library, etc., etc. And besides both his grandparents were summer neighbors and are buried adjacent to the bones of that famous illustrious statesman, Daniel Webster, in the Mansfield cemetery.

I would like to add that this giant of the scientific world, Francis Devereux is also an authority in the science of rate and precious stones. Our biographical time is up and you will have to call by and see for yourself the tremendous capacity of this technical linguistic wizard.

Going north from San Diego we would naturally zig-zag east to west on up to Portland and the Columbia. This I had previously done. So we took a bee-line from San Diego to Salt Lake City. Except for some 50 miles north of San Diego and some 50 miles south of Salt Lake City, you will travel through the least fertile and the most undesirable scenery possible to describe. Scarcely a half-starved critter or a jack-rabbit to break the monotony. One outstanding bright spot on the road was this big gambling centre, Las Vegas. You have never seen so many silver dollars in your life. You could easily spot the losers with that dejected look, and the winners who were continually jangling two or more cartwheels together. Believe it or not, half the gang were women or rather female lady jockeys.

Was it cold the night we camped 50 miles south of Salt Lake City, at an altitude of some 6,000 feet? Some of you old "duffers" may be interested to learn (as the rumor goes) that for a mere pittance you can contact a secret bargain counter in Salt Lake City, that leads to a second state of matrimonial bliss—that is, after you have spent a few days in Reno. Having obeyed instructions, or orders, you retreat to within a very short distance from that Golden Dome of the Capitol of Utah. You are now right in the centre of what was once one of the most noted Harems in the world. For further information write me a personal letter with a ten-spot enclosed.

We say good-bye to Salt Lake City as we hit straight northwest to where the Snake River empties into the mighty Columbia. This is a better looking country. The mighty old Columbia has been tamed since I travelled its banks in 1911 on the S.P. & S.R.R. The various dams have changed it to look more like a continuous chain of lakes. The Grand Coulee Dam alone forms a lake over 100 miles long right up to B.C., Canada. While we visit for a few days here in Pasco, Wash., hard by the Columbia. We are sorely tempted again to delve into another biographical sketch of one Shorty Dawson. At 120 pounds, about 1907, Shorty was well beyond the strongest little man that ever trod the Crows Nest Pass, where meet the four states, Alberta, B.C., Montana and Idaho.

Do you ever have a yen to mingle with the immortals? If so, call here at Pasco and Shorty or his wife will take you to the grave of a certain woman who was once a dog fence band girl in Alaska and witnessed the shooting of the famous Dangerous Dan McGrew. Two guns barked as one and two men dropped dead. This woman came back to Seattle and spent over $1,000 on a so-called gold cure for dope. I can well remember it being advertised. She got no relief, then went back to Alaska. She came back to Portland, Oregon, spent another $1,000 for a different cure and got no relief. Broke and discouraged, she wandered into a small Gospel hall run by three Pentecostal women. Got saved from sin and shame, but not from dope. Upon advice she fasted and prayed, without even a drink of water, almost continuously for three and a half days by her couch, when in a vision on the window she saw written: "Lawla, get up, the craving is gone." Taking God at His word as she thought, she got up, cracked all of her dope bottles, and never touched the stuff again.

Right here in Pasco she became a strong and respected street preacher and finally married a well-to-do man. I knelt and wept on her grave. What a miracle, what a miracle! I shall be seeing her just inside the big gate up yonder. Thus I have very briefly described what a loving God will do if we can only believe.

Another "must" is a call at Spokane to visit a pal of my youth, Harry Higgins, and his beautiful wife, the former Fanny Goddard, at 17 the Queen of the Crows Nest Pass, at least so thought Harry. From Spokane we drove west for a visit to Grand Coulee Dam and then through the world famous apple country, Columbia River Basin and thereabout. Then over the Cascades to Seattle. And what a sight to see—so many boats plying the waters of Puget Sound.

A few hours and you are in B.C., Canada. Now, if you are a native of California, either park your car or keep away from beautiful Victoria or Vancouver Island. You will hang for sure for manslaughter on the streets and byways. Do they ever move slow! Victoria, the B.C. Capitol, and City of the Living Dead. No room there for a Yankee "speed" artist. After a day or so in the beautiful city of Vancouver, you may go east on either side of the most beautiful Fraser River up to Hope, B.C., where both roads and river meet. Fringe Hope for more than a hundred miles, and maybe nearer 500 miles, right up to Banff, you are in for the best and most spectacular treat of your life, up to the world famous Fraser River Canyon, where for the most part the railroads and rivers occupy most every inch of footage at the bottom and so the new Trans-Canada auto road must dig in, halfway up the cliffs, which affords a very beautiful and spectacular view both down and skyward.

Some of the route cost over three million dollars per mile, and that without graft, 'tis said. Before the railroad came it took a large corps of British Civil Engineers three years to get just a rough wagon road surveyed up the canyon to where gold had been found somewhere near the head of the Columbia River. On and on, you will come into year-round snow-banks and finally arrive at Banff. Should you not have the time and money to visit Banff, Lake Louise and Jasper, get yourself a Geographical—old one 25¢.

Time has run out on me and Santa is right on the roof of a nearby house, so I leave you at Banff, Alberta, where I shoot down to Calgary to visit some loved ones, the big stampede and some old, old has-been cowboy friends—after which I go southwest 150 miles, close to Montana border and up the Crows Nest Pass where I grew up as a stammering, lisping mule skinner in the coal mines. My chief avocation was as a "Crusher" Coleman.

THIS IS IT—FINIS—Good-bye, Good Luck and may our most loving God grant you all the best of health, a very merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year, is the wish of your old friend,

HARRY BANSMORE.
